

Does your land have renewable energy potential?

Involving the local community in a project may be worth considering ...

and we can help.

We're a consultancy focused on growing the community energy sector

Community Energy Experts

Since 2011, Scene has been deeply involved in engaging communities across the UK with renewable energy.

Alongside our consultancy work, we have also carried out detailed market research on the technological, social and financial aspects of community engagement in commercial developments.

Building on our research and consultancy work, we have identified the key problems and barriers faced by landowners who are serious about engaging communities.

Why involve the community?

Energy projects are capital intensive, and require large sums of money and plenty of energy to be spent at risk.

Partnering with a community organisation, either to lease your land, or enter a joint venture, can unlock finance, expertise and energy required to see a project through.

Landowners throughout the UK are benefiting from community partnerships. Why not see if you could benefit too?

Our services for landowners include:

➔ Advisory Services

Renewable energy potential is diverse - here in the Britain we have some of the best wind and water resources around, and even our sun produces plenty of energy.

We are able to advise impartially on which of your resources may be worth pursuing. In addition, we are able to advise on financial and partnership models which may make the capital costs and work load more manageable.

If a project looks worth taking forward, our team is experienced in the financial and technical aspects of managing projects through to the construction stage and onwards to completion.

➔ Partnership Development

Whilst some landowners have the capital and the risk appetite to take on a renewable energy project alone, many do not.

For those who do not, another fantastic opportunity exists - partnering with the local community. A local development partnership opens up opportunities for lower risk joint ventures and/or co-operatives which see win-wins for all of the parties involved.

Scene Consulting specialises in managing multiparty relationships and can help to facilitate partnerships with local community energy organisations as well as with commercial developers. Such partnerships can greatly improve planning prospects and are an excellent way to achieve genuine community support for renewables projects.
